1. A photostat copy of the Soviet handbook "Impulse Systems of Multi-channel Radio Communication" is on hand in the CIA library for reference purposes. This handbook was issued by General of Engng Technical Service N. M. IZVINGIN in 1947. It is being used for the training of Soviet officers. The document number of this handbook is
2. This handbook does not contain any technical novelties. Decimeter waves were used for telecommunication purposes before the war. They were also utilized in wartime to maintain connection over insecure terrain or with isolated units. The recommending preface written by the Administration for Combat Training of the Signal Troops of the Ground Forces indicates that the Soviet signal force is highly interested in this subject. All devices described in the book are of foreign make.
